Albaraka Türk Conveys a Message of "Sustainability" Through the Universal Language of Art at COP31

Albaraka Türk Participation Bank is bringing its message on waste and sustainability to the world stage through the universal language of art at the COP31 United Nations (UN) Climate Change Conference, where solutions to the global climate crisis are being discussed, featuring a special piece selected from its renowned Calligraphy Collection. Participants will be able to visit this special exhibition in the Copart area from November 9-20, 2026.

Albaraka Türk, Turkey's first and pioneering participation bank, is taking its place at the COP31 UN Climate Change Conference—the most prestigious international platform where solutions to the global climate crisis are discussed. Placing the principle of "fair and efficient use of resources"—which lies at the heart of the participatory banking philosophy—at the center of its operations, the bank is showcasing select works from the Albaraka Türk Calligraphy Collection, which reflects its deep-rooted institutional heritage, to the international public and world leaders in the summit's culture and art-focused Copart area. The works will be on display for visitors at the COP31 Copart exhibition from November 9–20, 2026.

The "It's Up to Us" Motto Meets the Aesthetics of Art

Albaraka Türk, which implements all its sustainability and corporate social responsibility initiatives under the "It's Up to Us" motto, is going beyond its financial responsibilities through its participation in COP31 to bring a deep-rooted cultural mission to the global stage.

The exquisite calligraphy works on display in the Copart area from November 9–20, 2026, blend the themes of avoiding waste, a sense of stewardship, respect for nature, justice, social solidarity, and a balanced lifestyle—which form the foundation of Islamic civilization and the principles of participatory finance—with the elegance of art. The works convey universal and timeless messages spanning centuries to global decision-makers and participants seeking climate action.

Principles of Participatory Finance and a Global Sustainability Vision Under One Roof

Yasin Kaynar, Deputy General Manager of Sustainable Finance at Albaraka Türk, who commented on the bank's participation in COP31 and the exhibited collection, described the bank's approach to sustainability as follows: "Our philosophy of participatory banking teaches us not to harm people, society, or nature while managing financial resources, but rather to add value. The most tangible reality underlying the climate crisis and resource scarcity we face today on a global scale is the reality of 'waste.' As Albaraka Türk, we have chosen to convey the sustainability responsibility we have undertaken under our 'Bize Bağlı' vision not only through the financing models we offer but also through traditional Calligraphy—the most elegant expression of our ancient civilization. The select works from our collection, exhibited in the Copart area at COP31, showcase in an aesthetic language on the international stage that the principles of the circular economy, sustainability, and zero waste—which the modern world seeks—already exist within our culture, our faith, and our roots."

Special works selected from the Albaraka Türk Calligraphy Collection that explore the theme of sustainability will be on display in the Copart exhibition area at the COP31 summit from November 9–20, 2026, and will be open to all participants and delegations.
